veryone has important documents that are key to their life: driver's license, wedding license, voter registration, ID card, enlistment contract. These are just a few. Did you know as a linguist you have one very important piece of paper that can help you get some money into your pocket? Anyone have an idea of what it may be?

As you finish up your time at DLIFLC, you will be taking the Defense Language Proficiency Test in your respective language. You've worked long and hard for this day, admittedly the most stressful day(s) you'll ever face at DLIFLC. Your teachers have emphasized the importance of this examination to your being allowed to graduate. You go to the Tin Barn (or wherever they are posting the scores these days) and scroll down that list of Social Security numbers until you find yours, finger across and see that you've passed -- with at least a 2 rating in both listening and reading and a 1+ in speaking. You've made it! You are officially qualified

There will be much partying planned for later in the week.

But wait ... there's more to this story. Your scores are reported to your branch. Did you know that? How is that done? Well now we get to the purpose of this little article.

Your DLPT scores are reported using DA Form 330, the Language Proficiency Questionnaire. Due to space limitations I cannot include a copy of what this form looks like, but your platoon sergeant should be able to show you one. Three copies of the DA Form 330 are made. One goes into your personnel folder, one goes to branch, and the other one...goes to you.

What do you do with your copy?

Fold it up and put it in your wallet? Throw it on the desk and forget about it?

Not good ideas.

Anyone heard of Foreign Language Proficiency Pay (FLPP)? Yea, that's right ... the extra money you can get paid for being a linguist! You've worked long and hard to get where you are right now. Don't you want to reap one of the benefits of that struggle? Well then, hold on tight to that DA From 330 and carry your copy with you wherever you go on your military moves. Don't put it in your household goods shipment. Don't send it to your parents for safekeeping.

Once you arrive at your first permanent duty station and your unit, your Command Language Program Manager (CLPM) is going to smile and greet you warmly by saying "I need a copy of your 330." Probably exactly like that and possibly before they even say hello. And you (hopefully) will say: "Yes, sir. I've got a copy for you right here. How long will it take for my FLPP to get started?" But if you say "Hunh? I didn't think I needed that," your CLPM is going to say many things, some unsuitable for print. The DA Form 330 is the critical document needed to get you money in your pocket -- up to $200 a month. Everyone can use an extra $200. Please do not leave DLIFLC or your AIT without it. Make sure that when you do leave DLIFLC that the MILPO has given you your copy. Protect it. Make extra copies. Mail those home to your parents if you want. But don't lose that 330.

Without the 330, we in the field cannot start your pay, and we can't get a copy for you. Once you leave DLIFLC, the burden is on you to prove you have passed the test. If you can't do that ... watch your buddies get their pay because they had their proof.

Editor's Note: O'Shea is the Command Language Program Manager for III Corps and Fort Hood, Texas. He is a graduate of the Basic and Intermediate Russian courses at DLIFLC and is rated as a Master Instructor by the Air Force Technical Training Command. He has over 24 years of experience in mentoring, training and caring for linguists, both on active duty and in civil service. He has no opinion on anything, enjoys cooking lousy barbecue to annoy his neighbors and their dogs, and plays FLOG on weekends that are sunny. If you would like to contact him with a good barbecue recipe or tips on how to improve his golf (AKA FLOG) game, please wait until you get to Fort Hood. Make sure you have your 330 with you.

n hopes of providing affordable housing to military members and freeing up local housing for civilians, the Fort Ord Reuse Authority made the first 23 units of the projected 190 homes available at the former Fort Ord's Abrams Park B housing area June 8.

Navy Petty Officer 3rd Class Joseph Reece, a journalist at the Naval Postgraduate School, was the first to receive a set of keys to one of the new homes — a four-bedroom townhouse.

"New growth is coming back to the former Fort Ord in Abrams Park B," said Col. Peter Dausen, the now retired Presidio of Monterey's garrison commander. "We are getting Fort Ord back to good use."

Michael Houlemard, executive director of the Fort Ord Reuse Authority, served as master of ceremonies for the grand opening at the revamped housing area. June 8. Marina Mayor and FORA chairperson Jim Perrine; Rep. Sam Farr; Supervisor Edith Johnsen, chairperson of the Monterey County Board of Supervisors: and Fran Wagstaff. executive director of the Mid-Peninsula Housing Coalition, also spoke.

"No Army funds were used since all funding came from the private sector." Wagstaff said. "Fort Ord housing has been boarded up for several years, but we saw the need for affordable housing. We've renovated, managed and successfully rented Preston Park, generating $2 million a year, much which helped renovate Abrams Park B."

"We want military communities to be similar to civilian communities," Farr said. "Future military housing will be built to local and state standards, not the previously used federal standards. The federal government has programmed $400 million over several years to clean up and rehabilitate the former Fort Ord

Twenty-six of the units became available in May and another 23 were ready to move into June 8.

The housing area features two- and four-bedroom apartments and townhouses located within six courts or streets surrounding Brostrom Drive. Rental fees are $950 for two-bedroom, 1,100 square feet apartments or the more affordable fees of $615 for lower ranking enlisted families. For the four-bedroom units, regular rents are $1,250 or the more affordable price of $790. These four-bedroom units range from 1,680 to 1,770 square feet.

Under the agreement, five percent of monthly renovations are set aside as affordable housing. The joint militarycivilian effort will open 190 sets of housing on the former Fort Ord within the next six months - about 25 each La Mesa Housing Office handles the waiting lists and can be reached by calling (831) 656-5012.

"One of the county's top priorities is affordable housing," Johnsen said. "This is a combined effort from the military and civilian communities and federal and state governments to make that priority a reality."

Mid-Peninsula Housing Coalition is a private, nonprofit housing, affordable development and management corporation, which renovated and manages the 352 townhouse units at adjacent Preston Park.

Mid-Peninsula Housing Coalition received $5.2 million in renovation funding from Mid-Peninsula Bank and the Federal Home Loan Bank for the entire Abrams Park B project, a project that came at with a price tag of nearly $40,000 for revamping each unit.

Renovation work includes new roofing, carpeting and tile floors, new stoves and refrigerators, water heaters and heaters, some wiring and trenches for underground plumbing to hook up individual utility meters for each house.

Abrams Park was named after Gen. Creighton W. Abrams Jr., a Vietnam War commander and the namesake for the Abrams M-1 tanks. The housing area was built in 1978 and closed in 1993-1994 when Fort Ord closed as an active installation. The homes have remained vacant since the closure victims of age, deterioration and vandalism.

ne hundred and seventy three military linguist teams tested their language skills and knowledge as they competed for medals, trophies and recognition for their home units during the 11th Annual Worldwide Language Olympics May 14-18 on the Presidio of Monterey.

"Many of you trained for this at least six months or longer at your units." said Col. Kevin Rice. Defense Language Institute Foreign Language Center, commandant and commander of DLIFLC and the Presidio of Monterey, as he addressed the linguists during opening ceremonies. "You competed at local Olympic levels to get here, and now you are here to compete at DLI. We wish each one of you success.

"This is the big one here, the Worldwide Language Olympics." Rice said. "Now you're here to show what you've got and see if you can go all the way to be in the victor's podium and receive an award for both personal ability in your language and for your

This year, the 173 competing teams represented 11 Chinese-Mandarin, 15 Persian-Farsi, 33 Korean, 34 Arabic, 38 Spanish and 42 Russian language teams. Military linguists came from Korea, Japan, Hawaii, Germany and several installations within the continental United States.

WLO events consist of Showdown. Gisting, Intelligence Triathlon, Jeopardy, and Impromptu. Showdown is new this year and puts both team members sitting at computers answering 10 questions in the target language. The scoring is calculated automatically. Gisting tests competitors listening and reading abilities.

Intelligence Triathlon is a combination of running laps around Price Fitness Center track and getting intelligence information. Competitors interview a native speaker, extract information from written documents listen to audiotapes and answer 50 multiple-choice questions on information gathered from the different

"This event combines intelligence activities with physical running between intelligence-gathering stations," said Sgt. Mai. Norman Zlotorzynski, the former WLO coordinator and now retired sergeant major most recently in charge of the military language instructor program. "This is a timed event, which knocks competitors intensity levels up. They do biodating interviews, document exploitation and numbers transcriptions. Then they use the information they collected at the first three stations to answer a 50question questionnaire at station 4. We subtract the time it took them to compete the course, combine the two teammates' scores to determine the winners

"Intel Triathlon is realistic training gathering information, analyzing it and reporting results. We tried to get all intelligence military occupational specialties involved in this event," he said. "For each of the languages, there is always a scenario built around each language. The Korean language is using a weather catastrophe, a huge snowstorm that happened in Korea. Arabic linguists rely on a scenario where somebody has been murdered, and police are doing an investigation. The Russian linguists collect information from a peacekeeping type of mission and the Chinese are doing a boat people kind of thing.'

Impromptu is another challenging event for the competitors.

The event combines impromptu reading, listening and translating skills for both partners, especially with working from scratch on an unfamiliar topic of their choosing.

"Basically, one team member picks a random topic and has three minutes to come up with information on that topic," he said. "One team member speaks in the native language, and his or her partner translates one sentence at a time into English. Impromptu is a great event for DLI and Language Olympics because it exercises language ability to the nth degree: speaking, impromptu speaking and impromptu translating. This is probably the hardest thing that linguists will have to do.

"I've been an Arabic linguist for 30 vears, and this is my second Worldwide Language Olympics," said Chief Warrant Officer 2 Mark Schulert, 513th Military Intelligence Brigade, Fort Gordon, Ga. "The WLO is based on strategy and knowing the language Impromptu is the most difficult and challenging event. My advice to linguists is to keep up your language skills and practice your language skills on the street whenever you can."

Competitors represented all four services, with ranks or grades ranging from lower enlisted up to warrant officers or captains.

"We get a lot of E-6s and E-7s with a few E-8s and a good group of warrant officers." Zlotorzynski said. "On the Reserve side, you have some Officer Candidate System cadets here. The last few years we've increased the number of lower ranking competitors. This is a good opportunity for young service members to travel with the older more experienced noncommissioned officers

"The WLO is based on strategy and knowing the language. Impromptu is the most challenging event. My advice to linquists is to keep up your language skills and practice your language skills on the street whenever you can."

who mentor them, and tell them what to expect with the WLO."

Zlotorzynski has been coordinating the WLO for the past three years and anticipates growth and changes for the future of the competition.

"Each year we try to make WLO different and fresh and new so it's not always the same thing. There will always be new games and adjustments." Zlotorzynski said. "We continue to grow. This stuff comes out of DLI's hide where we have no real personnel, monetary or equipment resources. It's always: beg. borrow or steal to get WLO successful.

"There's an opportunity to have local colleges and universities send teams such as from California State University at Monterey Bay, Monterey Institute of International Studies. Monterey Peninsula College, San Jose State University, and UC-Berkeley, to let them know what we do and see how their students compare to our linguists." Zlotorzynski said. "That would take it to a whole new level."

During previous Worldwide Language Olympics, people assigned to the former On Site Inspection Agency. now called the Defense Threat Reduction Agency, have out-scored their Russian linguist competitors.

This year was no exception The DTRA San Francisco Detachment team, stationed at Travis Air Force Base, earned first place honors as the best single unit and the best Russian single unit. This year's winning team included Sgt. 1st Class William Dick and Air Force Staff Sgt. Yuriv Topchivan, a native of the former Soviet Union.

The linguist team earned gold medals in Jeopardy, silver medals in Impromptu, and bronze medals in Showdown, Gisting and the Intelligence Triathlon events.

"I enjoyed most the Jeopardy and Impromptu events," Dick said. "We won first place in Jeopardy and with Impromptu, our main job is Russian translation and speaking. I came to last year's WLO and placed first in the Russian language. The competition was tougher this year since there was no one ton team favored to win "

"(The service members of DTRA) are the best Russian linguists we have in the U.S. military," said Zlotorzynski. "Russian linguists coming here for the WLO come for two reasons: to compete in WLO and meet with DTRA Russian recruiters who interview Russian linguists and possibly select them to work for DTRA."

DTRA teams are located at Travis Air Force Base, in Utah and at Dulles International Airport, Washington, D.C. Dick has been involved with DTRA missions in Russia and other places for implementation and monitoring of the International Nuclear Treaty with Russia, weapons missions and translations.

The Worldwide Language Olympics concluded with the closing ceremony and awarding trophies to winning teams or units at Soldier Field May 18.

Air Force Col. Johnny Jones retired from the ranks of the active-duty Air Force June 22, but his family says he will never retire as the world's greatest father.

BY SPC MITCH FRAZIER

fter 27 years, two months and six days of service, Air Force Col. Johnny Jones saluted for the final time June 22 at the Presidio of Monterey's Weckerling Center and joined the ranks of a different force - America's retired.

Jones, who served as the commander of the Air Force Element here and the Institute's assistant commandant, will retire to Montgomery, Ala., with his wife Charlene and his two sons, Jason and Justin.

Lt. Col Steve Butler, the Institute's associate provost and dean of students, will assume Jones' former role until Col. (Sel.) Jeffrey S. Johnson arrives here to formally fill the position, Aug. 4.

Although the day marked the end of an era for Jones, the family name will continue to remain on the payroll of the U.S. Air Force thanks to his oldest son, Jason, who enlisted the same day as his father's retirement to be a loadmaster.

"I am just carrying on the family tradition," Jason said to the near capacity crowd at the ceremony. "We are so proud of you, dad. Hopefully one day I will be able to live up to what you have done."

Jones began his military career in 1974 upon graduation from the University of Wyoming with a bachelor of science degree in biology and a commission through the Air Force

"I am just carrying on the family tradition. Hopefully one day I will be able to live up to what you have done."

Since that time, he has logged more than 2,000 flight hours as an Air Force navigator in the F-4 series of aircraft.

Before coming to DLIFLC in November 1998, Jones served as the Director of Warfare Studies at Air University's College of Aerospace Doctrine at Maxwell Air Force Base in Alabama.

He has served as the director of the doctrine and concepts division of Headquarters.

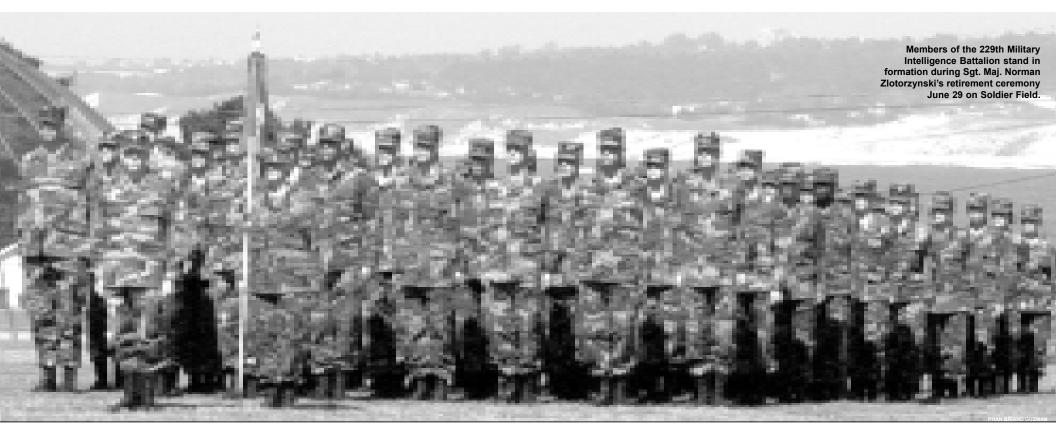

U.S. Air Forces Europe at Ramstein Air Base in Germany

He was a squadron commander in the Netherlands, an instructor at the Air Command and Staff College, the director of operation's combat strike officer for U.S. Air Forces Europe, and instructor weapon system officer, guided weapons instructor and function check flight officer for the 50th Tactical Fighter Wing at Hahn Air Base in West Germany

He is a graduate of the Air War College, the Air Command and Staff College, the Squadron Officer School, the German program here and both navigator training and Phantom fighter training.

Sergeant Major Says Farewell

NORMAN ZLOTORZYNSKI RETIRES AFTER 26 YEARS OF SERVICE

BY BOB BRITTON

fter serving in the ranks of America's Army for 26 years, Sgt. Maj Norman Zlotozynski, a Russian linguist and former chief of the military language instructors program at the Defense Language Institute Foreign Language Center, unlaced his boots and hung up his uniform for the final time June 29.

"Sergeant Major Zlotorzynski is a true teacher, soldier, and leader," said Command Sgt. Maj. Eugene Patton III, the DLIFC and Presidio of Monterey's senior enlisted advisor during Zlotorzynski's retirement ceremony on Soldier Field.

Col. Kevin M. Rice, the DLIFLC commandant and commander of DLIFLC and the Presidio of Monterey, presented Zlotorzynski with the Legion of Merit, the commandant's coin of excellence, a retirement pin and certificate during the retirement ceremony.

Zlotorzynski's wife, Kathy, received a certificate of appreciation and a bouquet of flowers.

Soldiers from the 229th Military Intelligence Battalion and Headquarters and Headquarters Company honored Zlotorzynski on the parade field.

"All individuals are special to me.

To the soldiers on the field, thank you for being 'All that you can be,'" he said.

Zlotorzynski, a Pennsylvania native, graduated from Penn State University with a bachelor's degree in 1975.

He enlisted in the Army and attended basic training at Fort Ord in 1975. His Army career took him to the Presidio of Monterey, to the White House Communications Agency, to Fort Bliss, Texas, and then once again back to Monterey to complete his active duty tenure.

He graduated from the Russian Basic Language Course here in 1976, and his follow-on assignment took him to the White House Communications Agency where he worked for 16 years as a Russian linguist. While serving at the White House, he assumed the duties of the noncommissioned officer in charge of the White House Translator Section and later as the sergeant major of the Data Systems Unit in the same agency.

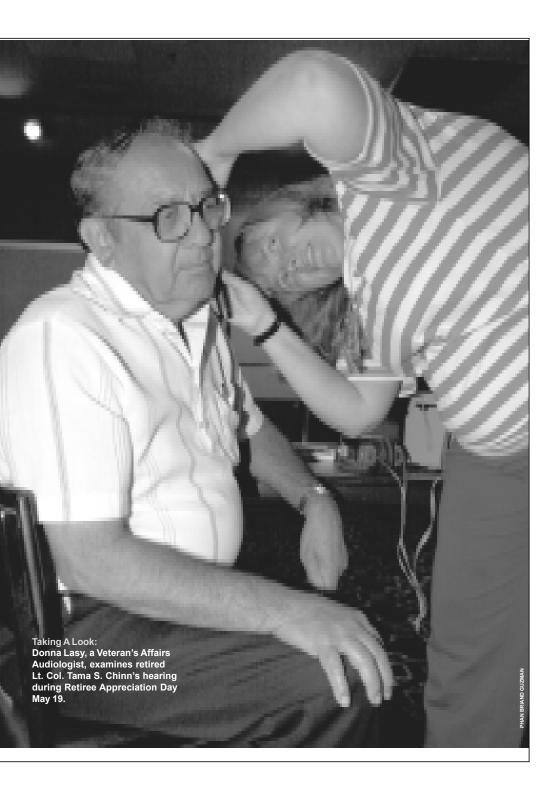

Zlotorzynski returned to DLIFLC in 1992 serving as the first sergeant of Company G until 1994. After attending the Sergeants Major Academy at Fort Bliss, Texas and serving there as an instructor, trainer and chief instructor for two years, he returned to DLIFLC for another tour in July 1998 as the MLI program sergeant major.

He is a graduate of the 97E Interrogation Course and Advanced Noncommissioned Officers Course at Fort Huachuca, Ariz.; Russian Intermediate Course at the National Cryptologic School at Fort Meade, Md.; the Battle Staff NCO Course and the First Sergeants Course.

Zlotorzynski's decorations and awards include the Legion of Merit, the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal, the Joint Service Commendation Medal, the Army Commendation Medal, Joint Service Achievement Medal, Army Achievement Medal and the Presidential Service Badge.

His daughter, Anne, is a Cadet-Major in the Air Force ROTC program at Penn State University. Zlotorzynski will return there to begin a second career.

Battling the WAR on Benefits

Retirees, local leaders gather at Ord Military Community to discuss the latest rounds of changes in veteran's retirement plans.

BY BOB BRITTON

he proposed Fort Ord Veterans Cemetery, Tricare for Life and retirement finances were topics that made their way to the forefront of discussion during the Retiree Appreciation Day at the Ord Military Community May 19.

Retired Maj. Gen. William Gourley served as the emcee for the event. Other speakers included state Sen. Bruce McPherson; Col. Kevin M. Rice, commandant of the Defense Language Institute Foreign Language Center and commander of the Presidio of Monterey; Bob Myers, Defense Finance and Accounting Service; and Dr. Steven Ezeji-Okoye, Palo Alto Veterans Affairs Medical Center.

Gourley focused on lifetime medical benefits for retirees. The program, Tricare for Life, was signed into law as part of last year's military appropriations budgets and will become effective Oct. 1. Under its provisions, military retirees won't pay any enrollment fees. However, they must have Medicare Part B to sign up for Tricare for Life

Medical benefits have been a priority for military retirees for several vears because under previous plans. retirees over age 65 were left to fend for themselves for medical benefits. They were no longer allowed use of the federal government's Tricare or its predecessor, CHAMPUS (Civilian Health and Medical Program for the Uniformed Services) for medical benefits. They could only use Medicare or supplemental private health insurance for their coverage.

McPherson spoke about the status of the Monterey Bay Veterans Cemetery at the former Fort Ord, which has been a primary concern of area military retirees. Fueled by the fact the closest veterans cemetery is located nearly four hours away from the Monterey Bay area, veterans and retirees who served at Fort Ord contend they should have the right and want to be buried in the area. The California Department of Veterans Affairs has approved $140,000 for an initial blueprint assessment of the cemetery, and more funding is anticipated by the end of the year. Actual construction won't happen until several years, he said.

The Fort Ord Reuse Authority has set aside about 50 acres in the Artillery Flats area of the former Fort Ord for the cemetery, and the federal government has approved 100 percent start up funds. The roadblock now lies with the state which must come up with funding for annual maintenance costs once the area is operational.

Dr. Ezeji-Okoye explained the operation of the Palo Alto Veterans Affairs Medical Center and its different outpatient clinics located throughout the Central Coast. Palo Alto's is tasked with providing satisfactory medical service for veterans by maximizing clinic efficiencies with a limited budget. The Monterey Bay VA Clinic at the former Fort Ord is the largest of the regional clinics, caring for more than 6,000 veterans and retirees annually. The Fort Ord clinic is slated for an upgrade in the future, he said, with the opening of a new dermatology suite and a new audiology clinics.

Military pay and allowances were another key concern of retirees at the gathering. Like active-duty service members, military retirees want to receive their pay in a timely manner sent to the correct address or bank. The Defense Finance and Accounting Service staff in Cleveland handles all retiree checks and pays out $2.8 billion monthly to 1.9 million military retirees. The agency receives about 35,000 phone calls daily about retiree benefits and entitlements he said

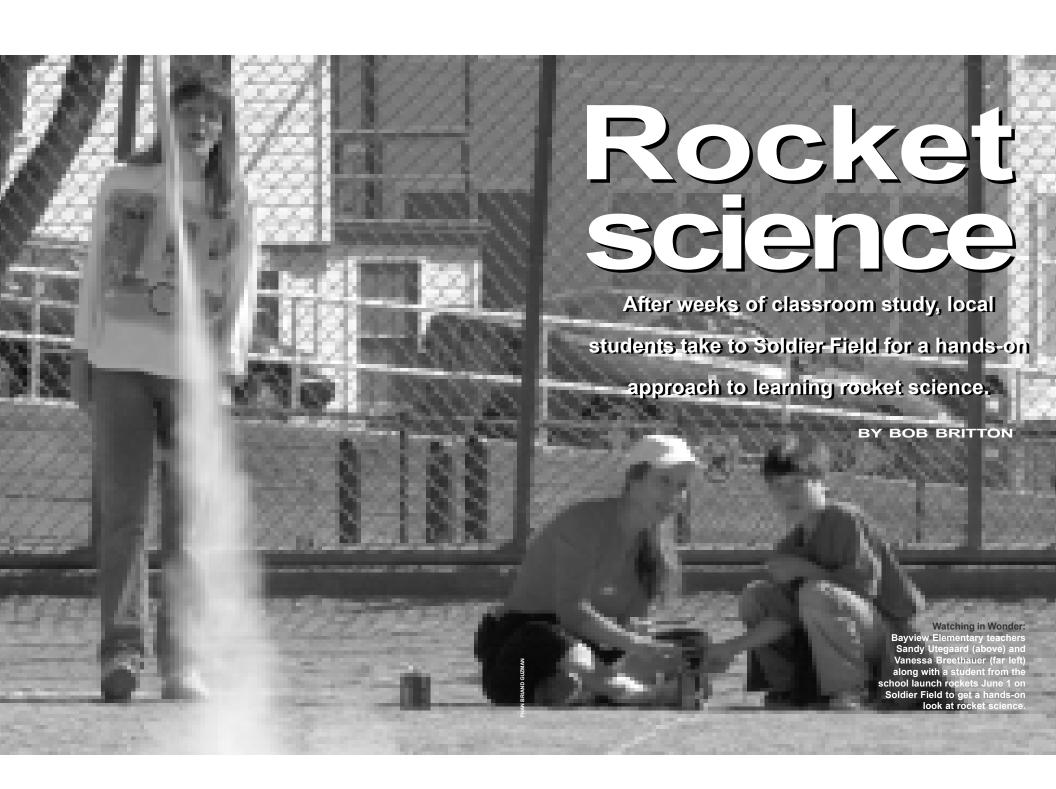

Myers also mentioned that a retiree's pay entitlements stop the date of the retiree's death. Survivor Benefits Plan proceeds to spouses and other family members begin 60 days after the veteran's death. When a retiree dies any owed retiree pay and entitlements are sent to survivors 30 days after the death. Whenever retirees change their addresses or survivors, DFAS-Cleveland needs immediate notification of the current information.

For annual cost of living adjustments to retired pay, Myers estimates the next COLA will be between 2.5 and 3.5 percent.

About 40 health-related, retiree and morale, welfare and recreation vendors also attended the appreciation day, staffing tables in the fover areas and provided literature before and after the speaker's presentations.

Before the day concluded, two retiree organizations gave Army Emergency Relief Fund checks to Rice for distribution. Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Chuck Hopper, secretary of the Fort Ord Area Retiree AER Golf Council, presented a $6,000 check from the organization's AER Golf Tournament held May 5. Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Dave Curran, president of the Monterey Bay Retired E-9 Association, also presented Rice with a $1,000 check. During the past 10 years, the retired E-9s have given more than $27,000 from previous golf tournaments for AER.

hirty four fourth- and fifthgraders from Bay View Elementary in Monterey watched as rockets flew nearly 600 feet above the Presidio's Soldier Field June 1.

The launch wasn't the military testing new equipment, but was the students' class project that culminated months of classroom study about rocket science.

After poring through countless books and readings on rocket science and rocketry, the students built their 12-and 18-inch rockets under the close supervision of their teachers in hopes of learning about the topic hands-on.

Money to purchase the rockets came courtesy of a school spell-a-thon which logged numerous pledges.

Students spent the two weeks before the launch assembling and painting their rockets. When the big day arrived, a student and one of the school's teachers triggered a battery-operated igniter system skyrocketing the missiles about 600 feet into the air. After reaching the zenith, the rockets deployed a small parachute and floated gently back to earth where the other students, teachers and assembled crowd awaiting its return safely behind the wire backstop by the field's softball diamond.

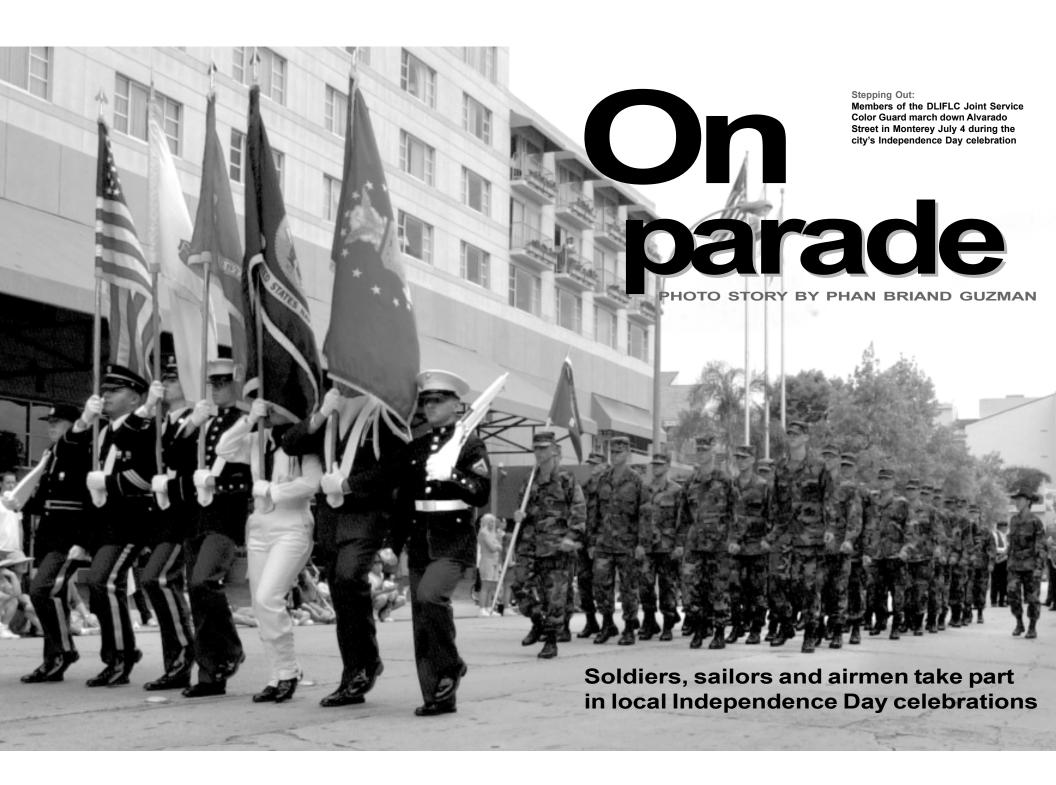

The basic rocket kits, consisting of cardboard bodies, balsa wood fins, a small parachute, small amounts of gunpowder and a solid rocket propellant, gave the students a chance to actually see in person what they had been reading about in books, said Karla and Maj. Thomas Sparks, parents of a Bay View student.

Rich Savko, chief of the Defense Language Institute Foreign Language Center's and Presidio's Emergency Operations Center and five-year veteran of the launch program, coordinated the launch with school and installation officials. Soldier Field was chosen as the launch site thanks to its open space, and lack of nearby houses or trees obstructing the area, he said.

This marks the 17th year the school has been launching the rockets in conjunction with the rocket science book work.
